Citizenship on hold in Canada

IMMIGRATION

Thousands in T.O. have dreams stopped dead

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

It's a tale of two contradictions, says David Cohen, a Toronto immigration lawyer.

Canada, a country that prides itself on diversity, has just made it harder for immigrants to become citizens.

Germain Zima is among the estimated thousands of Torontonians caught in the snarl of what moved through government channels as Bill C-24.

The law, which passed last year but started being enforced just this month, requires that immigrants be in Canada as permanent residents for four years before applying for citizenship. That's up from three.

The legislation also means time spent in the country on a work or student visa will no longer be credited toward the citizenship countdown.

"It's utterly unfair and unfortunate," said Zima, who came to Toronto from Rwanda seven years ago and has been a permanent resident since 2013.

He had expected to be eligible for citizenship on July 4. Now he can't apply until 2017.

"In the past, changes didn't have hard effective dates, why now?" Zima asked, adding implementation of the law should be phased in to give people a chance to transition. "Stronger laws to allow authentic applicants to get citizenship are good, but shouldn't punish all applicants."

Cohen, who's with the firm Campbell Cohen and operates the website canadavisa.com, has been watching the legislation since it was introduced by the Conservatives in February 2014.

His position is clear: "I don't think it's a very good law."

Along with making the waiting period longer, the law gives the government authority to revoke citizenship if an immigrant is convicted of crimes such as terrorism or treason.

"They've now created essentially two classes of citizens, making some feel less Canadian than others," Cohen said.

Added immigration lawyer Chantal Desloges: "I'm not saying we should feel sorry for people who commit acts of terrorism, but it seems a bit arbitrary that we'd get two different punishments for the same actions."

An online petition calling for the legislation to be repealed has been signed by nearly 100,000 people across the country. Many supporters are here in Toronto.

The possibilities of seeing the law changed are distant, Cohen and Desloges said.

"I don't see any realistic notion that the change could happen any time soon," Desloges said. "It'll be very difficult for any other political party to try to reverse that."

MORE DETAILS

The new immigration legislation also requires:

- People applying for citizenship declare their intent to live in Canada. Critics say that's unfair because people born in the country don't lose their citizenship by living elsewhere.
- People 14 to 64 must now sit for the language test when applying for citizenship. The previous age was 18 to 54.

Relations frosty at school

A charitable initiative at a Toronto elementary school has some students and parents feeling left out in the cold.

"Frozen Fridays" is an idea started by teachers and students at Yorkview public school. Students donate a minimum of $10 and, in return, receive four frozen treats, one each Friday during June.

The funds are to be devoted to charitable causes, such as Nepal relief and autism research.

Some parents say the initiative has backfired and, rather than inspiring a charitable spirit, it has separated classes between students who can afford the treats and those who cannot.

"Lots of parents paid because they felt pressured," said Georgia Netiscu, whose daughter is in Grade 1 at the school. "They said, 'I cannot do this to my child. I don't want my child to just sit there and watch.'"

According to Netiscu, the frozen treats have prompted jealousy and peer pressure, dividing classmates. She adds that it's not only the students who are being driven apart, but their parents as well.

While some parents say the treats are fine, others disagree based on financial or health concerns.

The main concern for others isn't the price tag, but another, longer lasting cost: student health.

Controversial flag still flies in Toronto stores

SOUTH CAROLINA

You can find contentious emblem in a few businesses

Major chains like Amazon and Walmart have stopped selling the Confederate flag following the Charleston church shooting that left nine people dead in South Carolina on Wednesday June 17.

But that isn't preventing several stores in Toronto from continuing to sell the controversial flag.

"No, we won't stop selling them," said Sat Gupta, owner of Reppa Flags and Souvenirs. "It's great to sell all kinds of flags. Some flags we sell for celebrations, some for occasions of grief, some for people who want to show solidarity with others.

"We don't sell many Confederate flags, there's not a big demand."

Reppa, situated near the Gardiner Expressway and Islington Avenue junction in Etobicoke, has never shied away from selling potentially offensive flags since opening in 1992.

Elsewhere, a worker at Flags International on Spadina Avenue said the Confederate flag is still for sale. The store manager was unavailable for comment at time of publication.

Flag Outlet Ltd, who describe themselves as a "proudly Canadian owned and operated business", have numerous Confederate flags for sale, including custom Harley, pirate and eagle prints. They did not respond to Torstar's request for comment at time of publication.

Several other flag stores across Canada have already stopped selling the flag.

CALMING THE TRAFFIC

Toronto already uses various traffic calming measures, including curb bump outs, speed humps and radar-detecting speed signs.

But there are many weapons available in the traffic-calming arsenal. These are some other measures used around the world.

CHRIS BATEMAN/FOR METRO

Speed cameras

CalmCam
WIKIMEDIA

How it works: A permanent outdoor camera photographs the license plate of speeding cars.
What's hot: Speed cameras operate round the clock and automatically issue fines to law breakers.
What's not: Critics say speed cameras don't reduce the number of accidents. Swindon, a town in southern England, didn't experience an increase in accidents after their cameras were turned off, according to town council figures.

Virtual speed bumps

CalmBumps
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

How it works: A coloured road surface and painted markings give the impression of a speed bump.
What's hot: All the benefits of a speed bump without any of the work.
What's not: "Any reduction (in speed) is likely to be short lived as drivers realize that there is no physical effect associated with the virtual hump," the UK Highways Agency found.

Mini traffic circles

How it works: Cars cannot proceed straight through the intersection and must slow down significantly to navigate the circle.
What's hot: An elegant device for slowing vehicles near residential intersections.
What's not: Cars may encroach on the pedestrian crossing areas of intersecting streets while passing the circles, a 1999 report by the U.S. Institute of Transportation Engineers found.

Gateways

How it works: A visual cue to drivers that they are entering a new, low-speed area.
What's hot: The UK Highways Agency reported reductions in speed of between 5 and 20 kilometres an hour at nine sample gateways.
What's not: Heavy visual impact. May not be suitable for crowded downtown streets due to their size.

Dragon's teeth

How it works: The triangular road markings draw attention to an approaching change in speed limit.
What's hot: A low-cost way of marking the entrance to a low speed zone on a major street. Quieter than rumble strips.
What's not: Snow cover could obscure the markings during winter. "As they are only fully visible close up, their contribution to any speed reduction is likely to be small," the design manual for the UK Highways Agency says.

Toronto's need for new speed limits

TORONTO'S DEADLY STREETS

Councillors vote in effort to improve safety downtown

Jessica Smith Cross
Metro | Toronto

Drivers are predictable, one expert says. Many will drive as fast as street design allows, regardless of the set speed limit.

"People pay attention to the context of the area, and what the street is built like, as opposed to the sign," said Wesley Marshall, assistant professor of civil engineering and affiliate professor in urban and regional planning at the University of Colorado Denver.

Toronto and East York community councillors decided to lower speed limits in an effort to improve safety in downtown neighbourhoods. Politicians voted Monday to set the limit at 30 kilometres per hour, down from 40.

Research shows that efforts like making roads narrower — or at least making them seem narrower — are among the more effective options for slowing traffic, Marshall said.

> For truly managing speed, speed humps tend to be the most effective.
> Stephen Buckley, the city's manager of transportation

Police enforcement can help in a limited way, but most cities find police services have trouble providing enforcement for an extended period of time, he said.

Traffic-calming devices, meanwhile, tend to be very expensive, said Stephen Buckley, the city's manager of transportation.

The city primarily uses speed humps, and emergency responders have complaints about them, he said. There are, of course, other options.

"There is a very large tool box, but their range of effectiveness varies all over the map," Buckley said. "But for truly managing speed, speed humps tend to be the most effective option out there."

City staff will work on their response to the community council's recommendations and make a formal request for money associated with it in 2016, Buckley said.

Codes to direct Pan Am traffic

GAMES

Each venue has an acronym

If you're a baseball-lovin' Pan Am Games VIP landing at YYZ, cruise that rental east on the 401 HOV to AJX and you'll be OK.

Sailors, the UPX makes the trip from PIA to RCY. Quicker than you can say PRESTO.

And, natch, CEB is the place for BMX.

Got all that?

Sports fans from near and far will need to learn a new lingo for the Pan Am Games starting July 10, with airport-style code letters for each of the 34 venues as 250,000 visitors and 10,000 athletes and officials from North, Central and South America descend on Toronto and southern Ontario.

More than 5,000 signs will feature the codes, helping direct ticket holders to places of competition like CEB — short for the Centennial Park Pan Am BMX Centre — and RCY, which is Sugar Beach on the waterfront and named for the Royal Canadian Yacht Club. Not far from Union Station, where the Union-Pearson Express stops.

"The signage we're unveiling today (Tuesday) plays a critical role for the games," said Pan Am CEO Saad Rafi, who was stumped when asked to decode some of the shorthand.

Some of the venue names, after all, are long — such as the CIBC Pan Am/Parapan Am Aquatics Centre and Field House. Or PAC for short. Others are easier, like the President's Choice Ajax Ballpark (AJX).

Games officials insist ticket holders will catch on because the acronyms are on their tickets and the signs, along with pictograms of the sports they'll be watching.

"The prevailing opinion is that's the best way to make sure that we have people getting to the venues on time," said Transportation Minister Steven Del Duca.

Also of note — the acronyms are the same in English, French and Spanish.

"All of these were focus-tested, not only the three-letter code but the three-letter code in combination with the pictogram and also people were asked about how to distinguish the signs," Rafi said.

"Since these signs are just now going up, I think we should give everybody a chance to get used to where they want to go."

With 17 days until the games begin, and new restrictions on high-occupancy vehicle or HOV lanes starting Monday to whip drivers into Pan Am mode, signs are going up in 16 southern Ontario municipalities, not only for motorists, but for public transit and pedestrians, as well.

On HOV lanes, vehicles will have to contain three people between 5 a.m. and 11 p.m. to avoid $110 fines and 3 demerit points.

OPP Sgt. Peter Leon said there will be a "significant increase" in officers on the roads to ensure traffic flows as smoothly as possible.

"The roads are going to be congested at times," he warned. "We will do what we need to do."

Del Duca said motorists — whether they are going to a Games event, work or on a pleasure trip — should use the online Pan Am traffic app to plan their journeys.

"When you've got a Jays game or a Leaf or Raptors game, we all know in this region when the games are taking place ... to avoid or make alternative plans or adjustments to our commutes. This is that on a larger scale."

Couple charged with murder in death of Vaughan man, 32

A couple wanted in the killing of a Toronto-area man faced first-degree murder charges Tuesday after a two-week hunt that sparked reports of sightings across Canada.

Clyde Marshall, formerly of New Brunswick, and Sabrina Chouart of Gatineau, Que., are accused in the death of Sina Parsi, 32, of Vaughan, Ont., who disappeared after a soccer game on June 9th.

Investigators said they arrested the pair Monday evening at a Wal-Mart in Niagara Falls, Ont. Shoppers had spotted Marshall and Chouart at the superstore and alerted local police, who made the arrest, Toronto Const. Caroline de Kloet said.

Parsi's grieving widow, who said she had spent two weeks worried and frustrated, thanked the officers for their efforts.

Her late husband, she said outside court, was a "wonderful" man.

"He was caring. He was the love of my life. He was my best friend. He was everything to me," she said. "I miss him so, so much."

There had been numerous unconfirmed sightings across the country — from British Columbia to northern Ontario — but it turns out the accused couple weren't far from their Toronto home.

Police investigating Parsi's disappearance had said the situation was "less than normal."

They found his black Dodge Ram pickup truck two days later at a Tim Hortons parking lot in Toronto's west end.

His wallet was found nearby.

The following day, they found his body in an apartment about a five-minute walk from where his truck was abandoned.

During the hunt, Toronto police released two videos they said showed the suspects.

At a news conference before the arrests on Monday, Det. Sgt. Michael Patterson said he wasn't sure of the nature of the relationship between Parsi and the couple.

The accused were remanded in custody following a court appearance Tuesday.

City's theatres to be merged

CULTURE

Council of 13 members will head board of directors

After four years of uncertainty, Toronto's three civic-owned theatres — the Sony Centre, St. Lawrence Centre and the Toronto Centre for the Arts — are about to be merged, Torstar News Service has learned.

In response to which, many insiders might say: Good outcome, but why did it take so long?

Answer: It's complicated.

A report from the city manager and other city staff — likely to be unveiled this week — recommends "consolidating the operations" of the three under a single board of directors, whose greatest task would be to "oversee the process of integrating operations."

That represents a huge improvement over previous plans to save money by selling or leasing any or all of them.

The Civic Theatres Report, as it is officially dubbed, will go to executive committee next week, and will be considered by full city council on July 8 or 9. The new, larger organization in the new plan would be called Civic Theatres Toronto. Instead of having a CEO for each of the three theatres, there would be one CEO — to be recruited through a search — presiding over all three.

> "The city will continue to subsidize the theatres.
> Coun. Gary Crawford

And a 13-member super-board would replace the three existing boards, which would all be dissolved as of July 9.

The new board would include five council members and eight citizen members.

And here is one new twist proposed in the new report: creating an independent and charitable Cultural Programming Trust to enhance programming opportunities. Translation: the purpose of the trust would be to raise money for projects at the three theatres in addition to their traditional revenues.

The three currently get a subsidy from the city. The total annual price tag is over $4 million.

"The city will continue to subsidize the theatres," says Coun. Gary Crawford, who has been a driving force behind the report along with former city manager Joe Pennachetti.

The city manager recommends that council approve "a new operating model with a mandate that consolidates the operation of the city's three current civic theatres into a single organization.

The change is expected to result ultimately in cost savings of about $500,000 a year.

Push for Waterfront funds

REVITALIZATION

City staff urges 'call to action,' and Joe Oliver may answer

Jessica Smith Cross
Metro | Toronto

The Toronto Port Lands have long been targeted for redevelopment. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE FILE

City staff is urging Mayor John Tory to issue a "call to action" and secure money for the next phase of Waterfront Toronto projects.

Tory should contact his provincial and federal counterparts to get support, says a report going to city council's executive committee. The report, expected to be tabled next week, also recommends Waterfront Toronto be given permission to borrow money to finance ongoing revitalization.

The city may find support in at least one federal leader. Finance Minister Joe Oliver, speaking one-on-one with Metro last week, said money for Waterfront Toronto might be available in the federal government's infrastructure fund.

He spoke positively about Waterfront Toronto's plans, in particular the revitalization of the Toronto Port Lands — 356 hectares of mostly publicly owned, former industrial land between Lake Ontario and Lakeshore Boulevard. The land sits east of the Keating Channel and west of Ashbridges Bay.

"I think, in principle, there's a lot to recommend in that project, because what it would do, first of all, is flood mitigation," Oliver said.

Although the risk is small, flooding from the area could "at some point come down to the financial core of the city," he said. "That is something we do not want to happen."

Oliver also spoke positively about the development potential.

"It would unleash potential for economic development, in the hundreds of millions, if not billions, of dollars," he said.

"We're going to look at each project and make a decision on the merits.
Minister Joe Oliver

Oliver wouldn't give a timeline on funding for Waterfront Toronto, its Port Lands project or waterfront transit.

"There will be money, we believe, for every major urban transit project in the country, and money, a lot of money, available for infrastructure generally right across the country," he said.

TTC execs check on streetcar holdup

The chairman of the TTC board is optimistic that problems with the delivery of Toronto's $1.25-billion streetcar fleet are closer to being resolved after he visited Bombardier's Thunder Bay plant Tuesday.

TTC chairman Coun. Josh Colle and CEO Andy Byford travelled to the factory to see for themselves what's holding up production. Under the original agreement, Bombardier was supposed to have supplied Toronto with 50 new streetcars by now. Instead, only six have hit the rails.

Colle said Bombardier has made "significant changes" he believes will help, replacing senior personnel in charge of the manufacturing line and improved parts testing.

But the TTC and Bombardier are still some distance apart on when the company can ramp up production to one vehicle every five days, which is the pace the TTC considers acceptable. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Couple's 532 pages of 'proof' not enough for immigration

BUREAUCRACY

Applicants angry after repeat requests for documents

Maria Canella and her husband, Kurtis Lee Boulianne, were convinced nothing was missing from their spousal sponsorship application for her immigration to Canada.

The 532-page "proof of relationship" they filed included: six pages of wedding receipts, 18 pages of congratulatory wedding cards, 30 pages of wedding photos, 21 pages of plane tickets, 39 pages of emails, 29 pages of cards and love letters, 57 pages of Facebook history, 36 pages of Skype and FaceTime records and 137 pages of iMessage chat logs.

That's why the couple was in shock when immigration officials asked them, via email in May, to provide additional proof their marriage is legitimate.

"Honestly, I felt insulted (because of) the extensive documentation we'd already submitted. What more do they need?" said Canella, 29, a high school teacher from New York who met Boulianne, 26, online in 2009 and married him in May 2014.

"There's no other explanation. Either they lost the whole file of support documents or they just didn't look at what we had in the application package," added Boulianne.

They were asked for more evidence not only once, but twice — again this June after they resubmitted their support documents.

"Failure to do so could result in the refusal and/or delay of your application," warned a letter from the department's centralized processing centre in Ottawa.

"We do not acknowledge receipt of mail or documents. If you send mail by courier to our office and you want to ensure that it has arrived, please check with the courier company. We will not respond to enquiries asking to confirm receipt of documents/emails/information."

Immigration officials told Torstar News Service they had no record of receiving the documents associated with the case and advised the couple to check the tracking number for the package they would have sent.

"They didn't receive my proof, which was with my application they received Sept. 10, 2014. It was all together in one box; it was all clipped by section, with clips. I mailed in a big box with seven envelopes in it. Each envelope was labelled," said Canella, who contacted Torstar after reading a story in the paper about the extent of errors made by immigration officials.

"If they received my application, they received my 532 pages of proof. I am irate. How convenient that they said they didn't receive it."

A meticulous organizer, Canella not only indexed and photocopied everything she and her husband filed, but she also took photos of all materials, including a screenshot of the Canada Post delivery record that showed the package was delivered successfully on Sept. 10.

"The case is well within posted processing times," said immigration spokesperson Sonia Lesage, referring to the current 16-month wait time for spousal applications from the U.S.

When forwarded the couple's mail record, Lesage said, "We are reviewing this situation and will ensure that the applicants will not be penalized, when it comes to processing times, if we indeed made an error."

On Monday, the couple again checked the status of their application on the department's website. Suddenly, it said a decision was made last Friday, the day after Torstar forwarded the Canada Post record.

Canella was thrilled their application has only taken eight months for a decision — half the officially stated processing time.

While she and her husband have not received anything in writing via mail as yet, they hope the decision is positive and that they won't be penalized for seeking help from the media.

WORLD REFUGEE DAY

'Very special day' for refugee

Selam Andemichael celebrated her first World Refugee Day by cooking for 30 guests whose support rescued her from five years of misery and legal limbo in Kenya.

The traditional Eritrean meal she made Saturday was special for the volunteers and supporters of the Toronto Friends of Refugees (TFOR), who brought her to Canada last year under Ottawa's refugee resettlement program. It took the grassroots group more than a year of tireless fundraising to make that possible.

"World Refugee Day honours the strength and resilience of refugees," TFOR volunteer Felisa Ponce said to the guests at Saturday's dinner — itself a fundraiser — at the Romero House refugee shelter.

"Thanks for being here. It's a very special day. Selam has generously donated her skills and time. She has made us believe in what we are doing. One displaced person is one too many."

A Protestant in a country where that's a small minority, Andemichael fled persecution, alone, from Eritrea to Nairobi, Kenya, where she lived as a UN refugee until last September, when TFOR raised $10,500 for her resettlement in Canada.

The 23-year-old attends City Adult Learning Centre and works in a grocery store deli after classes to get on her feet as soon as possible, because the support runs out after her first year here.

5 THINGS TO KNOW ABOUT TORONTO'S SUBWAY TOKENS

The TTC won't accept tokens after 2016, ending a payment method that started in 1954 when the first tokens were minted to coincide with the opening of the Yonge line. The transit service is the last major one in North America still using tokens. Here are some things you likely didn't know about TTC tokens.

CHRIS BATEMAN/FOR METRO

1 Explanation needed

Special guides printed by the TTC explained to wide-eyed subway riders how the new fare coins, mechanical turnstiles and transfer stamping machines worked. There was controversy, however, when it was revealed Toronto companies hadn't been invited to bid for the token minting contract.

CITY OF TORONTO ARCHIVES

2 Tokens used to be cheaper

When tokens were introduced, vending machines in the subway system dispensed three fares for a quarter. Adjusted for inflation, that works out to 75 cents a ride.

CONTRIBUTED

3 TTC used to hand out token holders

Between 1962 and 1968, the TTC gave away tearable cardboard holders with purchases of multiple tokens. The "TOKESTRIPS" were tossed out at a rate of about 300,000 a week for six years, and so, in an effort to cut waste, the TTC introduced plastic holders sponsored by the Bank of Montreal. One man didn't like it. Peter H. Storms, the man who made the cardboard versions, predicted chaos at the turnstiles.

4 Original tokens almost ditched

Such is life in Toronto. After just a few months of subway operation, the TTC decided to increase fares. Trouble was the new token vending machines couldn't be adjusted to reflect the new fare structure. The TTC briefly considered melting down, scrapping, or physically altering the coins rather than touching the machines, which were comically unreliable. A special crew worked through the night just to keep the tokens flowing.

5 FBI busted a counterfeiting ring

The current bi-metallic design of Toronto's transit tokens was necessitated by a massive fraud. In total the scam, which produced about 5 million fake tokens, cost the Canadian government about $10 million, the FBI said.

Teen airlifted after bus crash

ROADS

Three others on their way to Toronto taken to hospital

Four people, including a teenaged boy, were taken to hospital with serious injuries Tuesday after a crash between a tractor-trailer and a double-decker bus en route from Montreal to Toronto, police said.

The injured teen had to be airlifted from the scene while paramedics and firefighters tended to many of the injured on site, provincial police Sgt. Kristine Rae said in an interview.

Nineteen people were taken to hospital with minor injuries. Those who were not hurt were shuttled to an arena in nearby Williamstown where new transportation was being arranged for them, police said.

About 45 passengers were on the Megabus travelling along Highway 401 at the time of the crash. Tweeted photos appeared to show the damaged bus pressed up against trees on the side of the highway. They also showed a tractor-trailer with a badly damaged back end.

Megabus had little to say about the crash.

"Megabus can confirm that one of our vehicles ... was involved in an incident near Lancaster, Ont.," Sean Hughes, director of corporate affairs for Megabus.com North America, said in an email

"Safety is our No. 1 priority and Megabus is fully cooperating with the authorities with their investigation into the incident."

Hughes would not elaborate but confirmed the bus was travelling to Toronto from Montreal.

Police refused to speculate on the cause of the crash but confirmed the front of the bus had been damaged.

Megabus.com, a subsidiary of Paramus, N.J.-based Coach USA, is one of the largest privately funded providers of city-to-city express bus transportation.

HABITAT FOR HUMANITY

Spares' time best spent helping others

In the Spares household, traveling around the world to build a home for those without one has become a family tradition.

It started with the youngest in the family, Denise, who volunteered for Habitat for Humanity Canada in northern Zambia 10 years ago. Her parents were reluctant to let their 20-year-old daughter travel alone to a remote and unfamiliar country.

After hearing about her adventure, her mom, Joan, a retired elementary school music teacher living in Oakville, itched to hop on a plane.

Two years later, in 2007, she and her daughter went backpacking together through New Zealand, Australia and Asia. They then linked up with Denise's sister Stephanie and went to Zambia to build adobe houses in Katete, close to the eastern border with Malawi and Mozambique.

Now, Joan is organizing a team for her fourth trip to Zambia and eighth with Habitat. In the past decade, Spares, her husband Sam and her daughters have flown around the world on so many missions that they have trouble keeping track of them all.

Spares' trip to Zambia is part of an initiative to mark the 10th anniversary of Habitat for Humanity Canada's program to send volunteers abroad.

Since 2005, Habitat for Humanity Canada has sent 13,000 volunteers overseas.

SHAKESPEARE IN THE PARK

Julius Caesar, Comedy of Errors this year's features

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

The great Shakespeare is coming to High Park with a touch of young Toronto talent.

In an ongoing effort to foster and bolster emerging Canadian talent, the Canadian Stage has partnered with York University's Master of Fine Arts program to give graduates a chance to direct two shows that will be performed this summer.

Matjash Mrozewski CONTRIBUTED

Students Estelle Shook and Matjash Mrozewski are directing the famous plays of Julius Caesar and The Comedy of Errors respectively, giving them a rare experience on large-scale productions.

"It is a very exciting and challenging opportunity," said Shook. The Julius Caesar play, she said, has for long been famous as an instrument on how people vet the role of their government. This being an election year in Canada, it's all timely and much more convenient, she said.

Estelle Shook CONTRIBUTED

"I'm looking forward to seeing how the Toronto audience reacts to the play I'll have directed."

Canadian Stage artistic director Matthew Jocelyn said young directors in Canada don't have many opportunities to be part of large stages, with strong artistic projects. The collaboration will increase the two students' professional capacity, challenging them to up their skills, he said.

"This has really allowed us to give these students a very hands-on experience, under the guidance of some of the best professionals in the industry," he said.

He said it is important to see a university and a professional theatre company working together for a production program. The collaboration involves stage production, management styles, costume designs, lighting process and much more, he said.

Shakespeare In High Park opens on July 16. The two plays will run alternately every week throughout the summer, and it's a pay as you can show — although they do ask for a donation of $20 for those who can afford, said Jocelyn.

Premier Wynne to visit Israel

Premier Kathleen Wynne will head to Israel next year as part of a business delegation.

The premier's office says Wynne's spring trip will create new partnerships and promote investment in Ontario.

The office also says it is in the process of setting up a permanent representative in Israel.

Wynne says Ontario has worked with Israel for years — including a recently renewed memorandum of understanding — on research and development projects.

She is expected to visit Jerusalem and Tel Aviv to meet business and government leaders during the trip.

Davie Shipyard one step closer to deal

QUEBEC

Feds hoping to convert civilian vessel to supply ship

Quebec's Davie Shipyard is one step closer to being awarded a long-sought federal shipbuilding contract but Defence Minister Jason Kenney warned Tuesday that talks between the two sides aren't over yet.

Kenney said in hopes of speeding up the process of procuring a temporary supply ship for the Royal Canadian Navy, the government is skipping an open call for tenders and — for now — looking only at Davie.

The plan would be to retrofit an existing vessel to "bridge the gap" until the government's joint support ships are operational in 2021, Kenney said in Ottawa.

"This is good news for (Davie workers) because it's an indication of the intention of the government to sign a potential contract with the Davie Shipyard," he said.

Kenney said Davie's proposal to retrofit the vessel is incomplete, meaning more discussions are needed between the shipyard and the government.

The preliminary talks begin Wednesday and are aimed at determining if Davie can provide an interim solution acceptable to the navy's standards and needs.

"The federal government isn't going to sign a blank cheque," Kenney said, insisting any deal has to be right for the military and for taxpayers.

There has been tension between the federal government and Quebec over shipbuilding contracts ever since Davie was passed over in 2011 in favour of shipyards in British Columbia and Nova Scotia for highly lucrative federal contracts.

In May, Davie announced it would lay off 200 workers, leading Quebec Economic Minister Jacques Daoust to say the province was tired of "begging" Ottawa for a federal shipbuilding contract.

Daoust questioned at the time whether the federal government was stalling until closer to the scheduled October federal election to announce a contract for Davie, whose yards are located across the river from Quebec City, in the riding of Conservative minister Steven Blaney.

Kenney said the announcement was "absolutely not" about politics and that a decision should be made within "months." THE CANADIAN PRESS

'STOP-GAP'

The navy is retiring its two replenishment ships, HMCS Preserver and the fire-damaged HMCS Protecteur, without replacements ready to sail, despite a decade-long replacement program. Critics have warned that a stop-gap measure supply ship may end up costing the federal government more in the long run.

AIR INDIA

RCMP says it continues to investigate 1985 bombing

Three decades on, the RCMP says its investigation into the Air India bombing — the worst terrorist act in Canadian history — remains "active and ongoing."

On June 23, 1985, an explosion ripped apart Air India Flight 182 en route to New Delhi, killing all 329 people aboard, most of them Canadians of Indian descent.

Authorities believe Sikh extremists fighting for an independent homeland sabotaged the Boeing 747, which crashed into the Atlantic Ocean off the coast of Ireland. A federal commission of inquiry would conclude that a "cascading series of errors" by police, intelligence officers and air safety regulators allowed the attack to take place.

Talwinder Singh Parmar, a prime suspect, died in 1992. In 2003, Inderjit Singh Reyat pleaded guilty to manslaughter. Two years later a British Columbia judge found Ajaib Singh Bagri and Ripudaman Singh Malik not guilty. But police have not closed the file.

A "dedicated team" of Mounties continues to probe the attack on the jetliner and a related explosion at Tokyo's Narita airport, said Sgt. Annie Linteau, an RCMP spokeswoman.

The Mounties rarely discuss ongoing investigations, and Linteau declined to provide additional details. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Moose rider would face lesser penalty outside B.C.

REGULATION

Province's wildlife laws strict: Lawyer

A man who jumped onto the back of a moose as it swam across a lake could face animal-harassment charges in British Columbia, but would likely escape the threat of prosecution for a similar stunt in another province given Canada's patchwork of animal-rights laws, an expert said Tuesday.

While B.C.'s chief conservation officer said the culprit appears to have committed a serious offence that carries a hefty fine, the Animal Alliance of Canada said the province is one of the few Canadian jurisdictions to have clearly defined rules against harassing animals.

Similar rules are in place only in Alberta, Ontario and the Yukon, while Manitoba and Nova Scotia have less stringent regulations, said alliance director Liz White. Other provinces and territories do not address the issue in their various wildlife acts, she said.

Punishment would be unlikely to come through the Criminal Code either, White said, since it deals only with the more serious offence of animal cruelty and riding the back of a moose would likely fall short of that high threshold.

Still, the man's actions would be seen as harassment by nearly any standard, she said.

A man is shown on a boat pursuing a moose in a B.C. lake in this screengrab from a YouTube video. HANDOUT/THE CANADIAN PRESS

"We're trying to teach people to respect (animals)," White said in an interview. "Care for them, love them, observe them, enjoy them, but don't harass them and don't get near them. It sounds like this person who did this should heed that advice."

Wildlife authorities in B.C. said they were on the hunt for the man, who was captured on video leaping out of a boat and onto the moose while his companions laugh from a nearby boat. The video, shot at an unknown time and location, was posted to YouTube on Saturday.

> We're trying to teach people to respect (animals).

Chief Conservation Officer Doug Forsdick said authorities were fielding tips and trying to identify the man, who could face a fine ranging from $345 to $100,000 under harassment legislation designed to distinguish between legitimate hunting activities and those that could cause an animal undue stress.

The B.C. Wildlife Act forbids anyone from behaviour that would "worry, exhaust, fatigue, annoy, plague, pester, tease or torment" an animal.

A man is seen mounted on a moose in a B.C. lake. HANDOUT/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Trapping and hunting, however, are explicitly allowed.

Some provinces take a different approach: Manitoba, for example, only prohibits harassment from vehicles, while Nova Scotia's laws apply primarily to dogs.

In 2013, a similar incident in Ontario offered two men a hard lesson in the potentially high price of animal harassment. They were fined a total of $2,500 after being captured on film using a boat to repeatedly circle a cow moose swimming in a northwestern Ontario lake. One man then leapt onto moose, prompting the animal to flee into the woods but causing no lasting injury.

Animals could injure others or even die themselves when put under unnecessary stress, Forsdick said.

The most recent video was hard for him to watch, he said, because of the likely emotional impact on the animal.

WINNIPEG

X-rated cockpit chatter goes live

Dave Baxter
Metro | Winnipeg

A naughty conversation left Winnipeg residents with their jaws dropped Monday night, when the Winnipeg Police's AIR1 Helicopter "inadvertently" activated their public address system.

On Monday around 9:30 p.m. AIR1 was on a routine patrol when the public address system was switched on.

A number of Winnipeggers took to Twitter to say they could hear those in the chopper having a X-rated conversation about oral sex.

"Does the #Winnipeg chopper realize the entire West End can hear their convo about b–w jobs right now?" asked Twitter user @natncello in a Twitter post Monday night.

"Having a backyard hangout with the gals and the megaphone on that chopper was loud and clear," Natanielle Felicitas tweeted around 10 p.m. Monday night.

Others snippets of the conversation included "too much body hair," she wrote.

Stephen Kernaghan was hanging out by the Manitoba legislature building with friends when they heard someone talking through what sounded like a megaphone. It took a few minutes to figure out the conversation was coming from the helicopter flying overhead.

"It was very bizarre. They were cursing quite a bit," said the 26-year-old English teacher. "They're talking about how someone only makes $600 a week ... We caught the tamer version, which is sort of a shame."

Winnipeg Police apologized for the improper chopper conversation and admitted parts of the conversation were inappropriate.

"Winnipeg Police Service, the Flight Operations Unit, and the involved members sincerely apologize to all members of the public, especially those who heard the broadcast," said police spokesman Const. Jason Michalyshyn.

Police said the incident is being reviewed. It will be determined why the system was activated and if the three people who were on the chopper will face discipline.

Michalyshyn would not say why AIR1 was in the air Monday night.

QUEBEC

Court obtains, seals gun registry data

A bitter legal battle between the Conservative government, the RCMP and the federal information commissioner over the right of Canadians to access government records has arrived at a legal standoff that may not be resolved before this October's election.

The Mounties on Tuesday delivered an external hard drive containing a complete set of Quebec long-gun registry records to the Federal Court, in compliance with an emergency court order.

By preserving a copy of the only remaining records from the long-defunct gun registry, the court helped ease the immediate urgency behind the legal challenges — and thus set the stage for a potentially lengthy constitutional fight.

It wasn't the only significant development Tuesday.

Information commissioner Suzanne Legault is launching a charter challenge to elements of Bill C-59, the Conservative omnibus budget bill that formally became the law of the land Tuesday afternoon.

Bill C-59 rewrites the way the Access to Information Act applies to the old gun registry, removing the information commissioner's jurisdiction and granting immunity, retroactively, to anyone who broke the old law as it applied to registry documents.

Parents angry after young daughter told to cover up

A couple from Guelph, Ont., is livid with the city after a lifeguard told their eight-year-old daughter to cover up at a wading pool at a public park over the weekend.

Cory McLean says the lifeguard explained it was against the rules for girls to go topless in city pools.

McLean says his daughter was embarrassed and felt ashamed afterward and put a top on so she could continue playing.

He says this is a sexist rule that leads to body shaming.

He wants to see the rules changed to promote equality.

DEMOCRACY

Chong's Reform Act passed by Senate

A Conservative backbencher's controversial effort to rebalance power between MPs and party leaders is on its way to becoming law after surviving a stiff challenge in the Senate.

Michael Chong's Reform Act passed in the upper house late Monday by a vote of 38-14, with four abstentions.

Chong sat in the gallery to watch the nerve-wracking finale to his 19-month crusade to empower MPs and dilute the power of party leaders.

"It was surreal, I couldn't believe that it was actually taking place," he said in an interview moments after the final vote.

"We weren't sure when the vote was going to take place ... or if at all. There was a real risk that the bill was going to be filibustered out and that didn't happen."

Chong was "thrilled" with the outcome and predicted it will mean MPs will be able to do a better job representing their constituents.

"It will lead to freer votes in the House of Commons, where members of Parliament can, on occasion, break ranks with their party to represent their constituents views and that is a significant change from the status quo."

Among other things, the act is designed to give MPs the power to trigger a leadership review, and to subsequently vote to oust their leader.

Strike stops Chunnel

ENGLISH CHANNEL

Passengers stranded as trains cancelled

All trains and many ferry services between Britain and France were cut off Tuesday by striking port workers, stranding hundreds of trucks and thousands of passengers on both sides of the English Channel.

Adding to the chaos, illegal migrants who are camped by the thousands in the port city of Calais were seen trying to stowaway on vehicles stuck in traffic jams.

Rail company Eurostar said Tuesday it would cancel all passenger trains for the rest of the day through the English Channel tunnel, after the striking ferry workers swarmed the train line setting tires alight. About 50 strikers made it onto the tracks by the freight terminal building in Calais, which forced tunnel operator Eurotunnel to close the tunnel in both directions.

Eurostar said all trains are returning to their cities of departure and none were stuck in the tunnel. The company told passengers travel should resume Wednesday but warned them to arrive extra-early.

The striking workers also blocked the port in Calais, a major departure point for ferries crossing the channel, as part of their protest against feared job cuts.

The strike started before dawn, causing chaos in Calais as truckers diverted to the train line and got snarled in traffic, at which point migrants hoping to reach England swarmed the vehicles, trying to sneak on board.

Video filmed near the entrance to the Eurotunnel showed migrants racing to catch a slow-moving truck. Thousands of migrants from Eritrea, Sudan, Afghanistan and beyond are camped in camps around Calais, hoping to sneak into England, where they believe they are more likely to find jobs and prosperity.

The growing number of migrants in Europe has prompted France to announce thousands of more places in centres for asylum seekers and emergency beds in Calais, as well as a police task force to help dismantle smugglers' networks.

Britain's foreign office updated its travel advice, warning travellers around Calais to keep car doors locked against illegal migrants trying to reach Britain.

HUNGARY

Refugee infrastructure 'overloaded'

Balking at European Union rules, Hungary will temporarily not take back any asylum seekers who registered in Hungary but moved elsewhere in Europe before their requests were resolved, the government said Tuesday.

According to the EU's Dublin regulation, refugees can be sent back to the country where they first requested asylum. Hungary has become a point of entry into the bloc for tens of thousands of migrants from Asia, the Middle East and Africa. While many migrants travel first through Greece, Serbia, Macedonia and other EU member or candidate countries, the bloc has expressed concerns about their safety in those places.

Government spokesman Zoltan Kovacs said that Hungary had informed 14 mostly EU countries — including Austria, Germany, Britain, France, Italy and Norway — that it will suspend taking back asylum-seekers it registered because its refugee infrastructure is overloaded.

The government said that police had apprehended 60,620 people who entered the country illegally, nearly all from Serbia, so far this year, compared with some 43,000 all of last year.

"Hungary has exhausted the resources at its disposal," Kovacs said. "The situation calls for prompt action and ... Hungary must take measures before the EU adopts its decisions on the matter."

Hungary's plan to build a four-metre (13-foot) high fence along its 175-kilometre (109-mile) border with Serbia to stem the flow of migrants has drawn much criticism from neighbouring countries and human rights groups, but even some of them acknowledged that Hungary is facing an extraordinary challenge.

Leaks back suspicions of money links between Saudi Arabia, Arab media

A financially troubled Lebanese TV network received a $2 million Saudi bailout in return for adopting a pro-Riyadh editorial policy. A news agency in Guinea got a $2,000 gift, while small publications across the Arab world received tens of thousands of dollars in inflated subscription fees.

That's the picture that has emerged from Saudi diplomatic correspondence published by the WikiLeaks group, backing long-held suspicions the kingdom uses its oil wealth to buy influence with media and research centres across the Muslim world. The leaked cables suggest an effort to dampen criticism, varnish its image and strengthen allies in the Arab world. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Zoo spokesman Mziya Sharashidze said Tuesday the bird was the tenth of its 17 penguins found alive after the June 14 flooding that killed more than half of the zoo's 600 inhabitants.

Police and volunteers in Tbilisi are still searching for a tiger and a hyena believed to be on the loose. Last week, a runaway tiger mauled a man to death in before being killed by police. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

POLITICS

Some retailers pull flags, while manufacturers see sales jump

Even as national retailers pull Confederate flags from shelves and websites after the shooting deaths of nine black church members in South Carolina, manufactures that produce the divisive symbol say that sales are now surging.

"I don't sell the Confederate flag for any specific group, I just sell the flag," said Kerry McCoy, owner and president of Arkansas' FlagandBanner.com. "This is America. Everybody has a right to be represented whether you are a history buff or a nut."

McCoy said her company expects to sell about 50 of the flags over the next week. That's about half of what they typically sell in a year.

Sears, eBay and Etsy said Tuesday that they would remove Confederate flag merchandise from their websites. Sears does not sell the merchandise inside Sears or Kmart stores.

A wave of merchandise bans came a day after Wal-Mart Stores Inc. said that it would remove all Confederate-themed items from its store shelves and website after the South Carolina shooting suspect, Dylann Storm Roof, appeared in photos holding the flag.

White House Press Secretary Josh Earnest, asked about the retailers pulling flags from stores, said those are "decisions for individual businesses to make."

He added that the businesses' decisions were consistent with the president's position.

The red-white-and-blue Confederate battle flag represents racism to many, and southern heritage to others. The debate over its place exploded after the church shootings. South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley said Monday that the flag should be removed from the Statehouse grounds.

Pete Van de Putte said sales of Confederate flags are surging at his Dixie Flag Manufacturing in San Antonio, Texas. "Any time there is a controversy about any flag, we sell more flags," he said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RUSSIAN AGGRESSION

U.S. to aid European defence

The U.S. will spread about 250 tanks, armoured vehicles and other military equipment across six former Soviet bloc nations to help reassure NATO allies facing threats from Russia and terrorist groups, Defence Secretary Ash Carter announced Tuesday.

Carter's announcement, made as he stood with defence chiefs from Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, comes a day after he announced that the U.S. would have other weapons, aircraft and forces, including commandos, ready as needed for NATO's new rapid reaction force, to help Europe defend against potential Russian aggression from the east and the Islamic State and other violent extremists from the south.

The defence chiefs standing with Carter all spoke bluntly about the threat they perceive from Russia, and the latest military plans provide a show of solidarity across the region and in NATO. Estonia Defence Minister Sven Mikser said the Baltic leaders aren't trying to restart the Cold War arms race or match Russian President Vladimir Putin "tank for tank," but the additional military presences will be a deterrent to Russia and could change the calculous.

Each set of equipment would be enough to outfit a military company or battalion, and would go on at least a temporary basis to Bulgaria, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, and Romania. Carter said the equipment could be moved around the region for training and military exercises. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ride-hailing apps target youth, teens

Sacha Simmons used to dread taking a taxi to her high school or someplace else to hang out with her teenage friends when her parents weren't around to give her a ride. Sometimes, the cab drivers wouldn't show up or, when they did, they were rude or haggled with her about the fare.

Those frustrations disappeared a few months ago when her parents introduced her to Shuddle, a ride-hailing service that caters to youngsters who need a lift when mom and dad are too busy to drive.

"I had some pretty bad experiences with cabs," Simmons, 16, says. "Shuddle is less of a hassle and I feel safe with their system. The driver knows who I am and it's more secure."

> Shuddle is less of a hassle and I feel safe with their system.
> Sacha Simmons

Shuddle is among a crop of California services providing rides to eight- to 16-year-old kids who need to get to school, a sporting event or a social activity. On Tuesday it introduced ShuddleMe, an app that lets the kids book the ride themselves within an hour of when the service is needed.

Besides Shuddle, kid-friendly ride-hailing options include HopSkipDrive and Boost, an experimental service backed by car maker Mercedes-Benz. Both those services require rides to be booked at least a day in advance.

These alternatives are seizing an opportunity created by better known ride-hailing services such as Uber, Lyft and Sidecar, which all have policies against giving rides to minors who aren't accompanied by an adult.

Shuddle charges a $9 monthly membership fee and its fares are about 15 per cent higher than Uber's for comparable trips. The membership fee and surcharge help pay for background checks of Shuddle's drivers.

Mobile wallet lets users add credit cards to smartphones

The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce (CIBC) has joined Canada's major wireless carriers in backing the Suretap mobile payments app.

Rogers, Bell, Telus, Koodo and Virgin are all offering the mobile wallet across a range of Android and BlackBerry phones.

CIBC says its customers will be able to use Suretap to add their Visa or MasterCard credit cards to their smartphones.

That makes CIBC the first of the five biggest Canadian banks to announce its support of Suretap.

CIBC was also the first of the major banks to announce that its customers can conduct mobile banking via the Apple Watch.

The Suretap wallet uses near field communication (NFC) technology to make payments with a smartphone.

CIBC also has its own mobile payments app, which allows customers to charge purchases of up to $100 to a credit card.

"Our partnership with Suretap gives our clients choice when it comes to paying with their smartphone and builds on our commitment to delivering the payments solutions that reflect where are our clients' needs are today and where they are going in the future," Todd Roberts, senior vice-president of cards and payments innovation at CIBC, said in a statement.

the big question

Will we ever get our hover bikes?

Maybe. Until recently, hover bikes, like robot butlers and flying cars, remained a pipe dream even in our high-tech world. Now a deal between British and American engineers and the U.S. Department of Defense will see science fiction come to life in the form of a "quadcopter." The prototype looks like a sideways-turned bicycle with two extra wheels — but it can fly. Its creators want to see it in your local bike shop one day as well as in the American arsenal. Billed as a cheap and safe alternative to helicopters, it will be designed to manoeuvre in small spaces and function manned or unmanned — though it's not powered by a repulsor engine like Star Wars' speeders. Why McDonald's is no longer our kind of place

SOCIAL DISCOURSE
Omar Mouallem

This is what dying looks like: Burger King injecting its sandwiches with bright red colouring; Dairy Queen using "artisanal" Italian breads; Taco Bell vying to sell alcohol; and Pizza Hut simultaneously decrying artificial ingredients and slipping hot dogs in its crusts.

These chains don't know whether to appeal to the best or worst in us, but what's certain is North America's love affair with fast food is over. The Big Macs' side of the bed has been replaced with Chipotle, Five Guys, Freshii and "fast casual" restaurants promising better ingredients, customizable meals, healthier food and a brand experience you don't have to keep secret.

The whole fast food landscape is being gentrified by a burrito bowl that's twice the price and equal the calories. I used to beg for birthday parties at the McDonald's Play Place. But inviting your kid's friends' parents to such a cesspool is too debased for most middle-class parents, too demeaning in the age of Omega-3 supplements and free-range chicken cutlets.

So, for the first time since the 1970s, McDonald's is dismantling more golden arches than it's erecting. It's safe to presume it won't leave the low-income areas of Canada and the U.S., as these quick-service restaurants have increasingly become class indicators.

There's also a generational shift that figures to be too strong for these brands to hold off in the long run. Millennials rich and poor are giving up on fast food. According to a 2014 RBC and NPD Group study, even traffic among low-income 18- to 33-year-olds has dipped at the Big Three (McDonald's, Burger King and Wendy's). Perhaps, just as my generation is eschewing personal vehicles for public transit and cycling in larger numbers, this is a rejection of our parents' unhealthy values.

Then again, we put the gas money we saved toward $12 gourmet burgers and shakes, plus another $2 for the egg topping. So much for healthier values.

So what is our problem with classic fast food?

It seems we're yearning for a simpler marketplace that doesn't bombard and allure us with gimmicks and movie tie-ins. The fatigue of seeing golden arches on every fifth block is worth travelling five more blocks for something slightly more cottage, even if it costs more and is a multi-million- (but not billion-) dollar brand.

Fast food in the old mould will always be there for us: when we're struggling financially, staggering drunk or needing nostalgia. But like car ownership, suburbs and all the goodies that came with the postwar boom, it had to peak eventually. And at the rate of Chipotle's growth, its peak is inevitable too.

These chains don't know whether to appeal to the best or worst in us, but what's certain is North America's love affair with fast food is over.

In the meantime, this new breed of restaurants also shows that quality-ish food doesn't have to be so expensive. The middle ground between fast and formal food used to be a costly night at Olive Garden. Now those "casual dining" brands are also suffering because the fast-casual Chipotles of the world are eating their lunch, too.

What ancient footprints on a B.C. island can teach us

Footprints in the sand are the cliché cover of a 1980s soft rock album.

Not, you would think, a headline-grabbing discovery.

The discovery in question is not even the kind likely to change much for any of us — it's not a possible cure for the flu, not a new alternative fuel to save us from oil, not the answer, once and for all, to whether Toronto is the centre of the universe.

But it's got our attention: What may be the oldest footprints in North America have been discovered on the shore of a B.C. island.

They were likely made 13,200 years ago by a mum, a dad and a child getting too close to the fire, maybe, or getting cranky or just getting in the way. The 12 footprints indicate a family group: a larger adult, a smaller adult and a child with size 7 feet.

The very early "us." And that is why we care.

The footprints on Calvert Island, preserved in clay covered by black sand, speak to our underlying, undeniable, ancient humanity. Not to our gender or our nationality, not to our race or our class or whether we stand by Bill Cosby (I can't believe you people).

It is a sense of global belonging to which even the researchers at the site, concerned as I imagine they are with the practical implications, are not immune.

"It makes the hair on the back of your head stand up," archaeologist Duncan McLaren told media. "When we started finding them, the excitement in the air was electric. It was really quite amazing. You know, there is no doubt in my mind what we were finding."

"You could see individual feet, you could see the heel pads, the toes, the arch of the foot," said fellow archaeologist Daryl Fedje. "It was just mind-boggling."

Once, when I was about five, I found an old key in the woods near our family cottage on Lake Muskoka. It was black and too large to be any key to our house or to our neighbours'. I kept it and searched for the door it might open, until I realized the door was probably gone, and so were the people who used the old key. It was only a remnant of them, like inscriptions in a used book, or graffiti on an abandoned building.

The footprints may teach us about the earliest people on Canada's coast, but they are most powerful as a nod to a brief moment in a human life, and to the imponderably long lineage of men and women through which we're all connected.

The buzz around cold brew

ON TREND

Coffee chains and indie shops serving up the 'luxury' bevvy

Melissa Dunne
For Metro | Life

Cold-brew coffee is one of the hottest drinks this summer.

When the mercury starts to rise Canadians often switch their regular hot cup of joe for a cold espresso-based drink.

But this season, many of us are hot under the collar for unadorned cold-brew coffee. While the beverage has been around for years it has recently moved from the fringes to the mainstream, with even Starbucks now offering it at select stores in the U.S. and Canada.

Cold brew is often served on tap or in what look like beer bottles at indie cafés. Alas, the coffee drink has no alcohol in it. But you'll likely still get an extra buzz from it, as it tends to be much higher in caffeine content than your average cup of java.

Balzac's Coffee Roasters just started offering cold brew on tap at its Distillery District location in Toronto, as well as at its Guelph, Ont., café earlier this month. Diana Olsen, founder of Balzac's, said she tested cold brew in stores last summer and it got customers buzzing.

The small coffee chain, now with 10 locations in Ontario, teamed up with Toronto's Mill Street Brewery to make their take on the drink. Balzac's version steeps a fresh-roasted Bolivian and Indonesian coffee blend in large tanks of cold water then infuses it with high-pressure nitrogen.

A 12-ounce serving of Nitro Cold Brew is $4.25, which is on par with what you'd pay for an iced latte, but pricier than a regular old iced coffee.

So why pay more for cold brew? Because it's a "luxury" product, says Olsen.

"The cold and slow brewing process extracts less of the undesirable oils and acids which contribute to a bitter taste in traditional iced coffees," she explained in an email interview. "The result is sweeter and smoother."

Chris McKenzie, owner of Jamaica Blue Coffee Co. in Vancouver, agrees with Olsen that cold brew is much more than simply iced coffee.

He started selling his take on cold brew in bottles in Squamish, B.C., last summer and it was popular from the get-go.

At first it was mainly young hipsters interested in the trendy beverage. He says his customers these days tend to skew a bit older, with many drawn to the lower acidity in cold brew versus iced coffee.

Jamaica Blue's version has become so popular it's now available in a handful of Whole Foods stores and small grocers in the Vancouver area.

McKenzie said he isn't worried about the big guys brewing up their own cold brew.

"Starbucks offering it was the best thing to happen," said McKenzie in a phone interview.

The world's largest coffee chain, perhaps most famous for its sweet Frappuccinos, is now educating the masses about the benefits of paying a premium for what looks like a plain cup of cold-brew coffee, McKenzie points out.

While very on trend, both McKenzie and Olsen are confident cold brew is not a flash-in-the-pan fad.

Although Canucks still clearly love their Frapps and Iced Capps, there's also a time when many don't want a drink overflowing with whipped cream, flavoured syrup and more calories than an ice-cream cone.

Drinking coffee that actually tastes like coffee and not a dessert in a cup on a hot summer's day? That's a "fad" with staying power.

WHAT THE HECK IS COLD BREW, ANYWAY?

To be clear cold brew is not iced coffee. Clear as mud? Put simply: Iced coffee is just that — usually hot coffee brewed the regular way then poured over ice. Cold brew, on the other hand, is more of a process. Coffee grounds are steeped for several hours, then the grounds are filtered out before it's served or bottled. One of the main draws of cold brew is that it's high in caffeine and is usually significantly less acidic than traditional iced coffee.

CAFFEINE CONTENT

Cold-brew coffee typically has more caffeine than regular coffee, but the exact amount depends on several factors. Jamaica Blue Coffee Co.'s cold brew has about three times more caffeine than regular coffee, but it is bottled as a concentrate, so the strength depends on how much water you add. Generally, if you use two parts water and one part concentrate it has about 11 per cent more caffeine than a standard cup of coffee, says the coffee co.'s owner Chris McKenzie. If you want a bigger buzz simply add less water and if you want to mellow out add more water.

ACIDITY

Cold-brew coffee typically is significantly less acidic than your average cup of brewed coffee. Again, it depends on numerous factors, but the makers of the Toddy Cold Brew System say cold-brew is about 67 per cent less acidic than hot coffee brewed the regular way.

CAN I MAKE MY OWN COLD-BREW COFFEE?

You can get a cold-brew coffee kit via websites like Amazon, or at most indie cafés this time of year. The kits will generally have a decanter and filter, as well as step-by-step instructions. Ask your local barista which beans are best for your homemade cold-brew concoction. If you want to take your DIY project to the next level pour your brew into some bottles and slap on some homemade labels to up the cool factor.

Juicy treats beat the heat

SUMMER FRUIT

Quench your thirst with the juicy perks of watermelon

Watermelon is a popular summer treat that not only hydrates the body but also balances your electrolytes with its high mineral content. VINCE TALOTTA/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE/FILE

Welcome to the first week of summer! Canadians work hard for their very few and very short dog days of the season. My hope is that you make the most of them with delicious hydrating, high-nutrient foods. Just for fun, take a look at what the Meteorological Service of Canada predicts your hottest day will be, and then stock up.

Summer's quintessential quencher, watermelon, can not only hydrate but also balance your electrolytes with its mineral content. According to Medical News Today, one cup of watermelon contains 17 per cent of vitamin A, 21 per cent of vitamin C, two per cent of iron and one per cent of calcium needs for the day. Watermelon also contains thiamin, riboflavin, niacin, vitamin B6, folate, pantothenic acid, magnesium, phosphorus, potassium, zinc, copper, manganese, selenium, choline, lycopene and betaine.

So don't go grabbing a sugar-loaded sports drink to rehydrate. Instead, try these simple methods:

• Make watermelon water by blending one cup of cubed watermelon and adding to one litre of water.

• Freeze cubes to suck on (great dog treats, too!)

• Slip a slice of watermelon into a grilled cheese. Trust me, it's delicious!

• Use watermelon to make salsa or gazpacho in place of tomatoes. Check out a few recipes at watermelon.org.

Any fruit or vegetable will help hydrate you to beat the heat but there is something special about watermelon juice running down your forearms that brings you right back to summer camp days.

TORONTO'S HOTTEST DAY

Foods deemed 'fit' may only make you sit

WEIGHT WATCHERS

Study finds foods branded as 'fit' increase intake, weight

Foods like Clif Bars and Wheaties cereal are packaged to evoke connotations of promoting fitness; however, a new study says this sort of packaging actually encourages eating too much, undermining weight control.

"Unless a food was forbidden by their diet, branding the product as 'fit' increased consumption for those trying to watch their weight," write authors Joerg Koenigstorfer and Hans Baumgartner. "To make matters worse, these eaters also reduced their physical activity, apparently seeing the 'fit' food as a substitute for exercise."

In the study, the research team recruited 536 participants who were considered "restrained" eaters, who, conscious of their weight, were constantly trying to eat right.

They gave them trail-mix-style snacks, some of which were "fitness branded" — with a picture of a pair of running shoes on the package — and others were simply marketed as trail mix.

The research team asked participants to pretend they were at home eating an afternoon snack and gave them eight minutes to taste the product and say whether or not they liked it.

In another experiment, they were given the chance to exercise as vigorously as they wished on a stationary bicycle after having consumed their trail mix.

ISTOCK

For the most weight-conscious in the sample, the labelling took its effect, leading them to eat more when the snack was "fitness branded" than when it was simply presented as trail mix. These participants exercised less vigorously when presented with the stationary bicycle, according to the study, which is forthcoming in the Journal of Marketing Research.

The authors concluded by suggesting such food items add a reminder to their marketing materials that exercise is still necessary. AFP

LIQUID ASSETS

@therealwineguy

I'm just back from France and boy is my palate tired.

I tasted my way from Bordeaux's Saint-Émilion region all the way to Burgundy. In between I spent some downtime in Beaujolais, a region that gets a lot of flak from wine snobs thanks to its Nouveau release every November.

While Nouveau is a fun fall indulgence, Beaujolais represents so much more than its thin, fruity persona.

I stayed in Brouilly, the largest of the 10 Crus (fancy for quality vineyards) allowed to put their names on their labels, and rediscovered something I already knew: Beaujolais wines rock.

From the sublime juice squeezed by a prestige winery like Château de Pierreux ($18.95-$19.29), to the bottle you get served at a local bistro, there's summertime joy in every glass.

Georges Duboeuf's 2013 Brouilly ($17.95-$24.99) is a good intro to the region with classic bright red berry fruit and thirst-quenching acidity that tastes best when slightly chilled.

Wild about going it Alone

Alone cast member Chris Weatherman. CONTRIBUTED

Last Friday night, History Canada launched their ruthless new survival series called Alone. The competition show follows 10 outdoorsmen as they're dropped into various parts of Vancouver Island's wilderness. BRIAN GASPAREK/FOR METRO

In Alone, the "survivalists" have to hunt, build shelter and fend off some real nasty predators, all while documenting their experience. Yikes. The last man to survive without quitting, no matter how long it takes, is crowned the winner.

Metro News had a chance to talk with Alone competitors Alan Kay, Lucas Miller and Chris Weatherman about their ultimate survival experience.

This has to be the most raw and ruthless survival show ever made. Why the hell did you sign up for it?

Alan: We get that a lot. We're definitely not right in the head!

Lucas: We all have a few screws loose in our head.

Chris: It was the ultimate challenge of our skills. For me, I wanted to see if I could pull it off, if I could survive in that environment.

There was nothing you could do to fully prepare you for that experience, right?

Chris: Nothing prepares you for the reality. This was the real deal.

Alan: You can research and try to prepare, but reality and perception are two different things. And when you hit the ground, reality hits you right in the side of your head.

Chris: There were several "oh s—!" moments very early on.

Some survival shows look tough, but still a little fun. It didn't look like you guys were having fun at all. It looked scary as hell.

Lucas: We're outdoorsmen and it's rare to have a playground ... I call it a playground loosely ... to test our skills in. It was the real deal. It's dangerous. You sleep with your axe. You may not make it. You could drop a tree on yourself. The animals are real. There's no camera crew around. But that's also why it excited me. My footage shows me. It shows how people feel in the wilderness, not just how people live in the wilderness.

Alan: That's what attracted me to the show. Everything was so real. It's never been done before. We've taken it to a whole new plateau. The danger level was off the charts. There was no games or experiments. It's just you, a sack of camera gear, and good luck.

What's more difficult for survival, the physical or psychological strain?

Alan: The psychological and emotional aspect is what it became all about.

Lucas: People don't understand. Fear, regrets, it's amazing what bubbles to the surface. And you have to work with that.

Viewers love seeing gnarly food being consumed on survival shows. What's the nastiest snack you had to eat on Vancouver Island?

Alan: I'd eat snails and slugs regularly because you didn't have to invest energy and chase them. They're slimy, but once you get past that, they're pretty tasty.

Lucas: I ate an unidentified bird. It kind of looked like a pterodactyl with a hooked beak.

After everything you went through to shoot Alone, would you do it again?

Alan, Chris, Lucas: Yes!

Alan: Believe it or not, I actually miss it sometimes. It was uncomplicated.

CHEF COMPETITION

Chopped whips up a Bachelor of a host

Former Bachelor Canada star Brad Smith is the new host of Chopped Canada.

Shaw Media says the former reality star will take over the third season of the Food Network Canada show, due to premiere later this year.

Smith was the inaugural star of City's The Bachelor Canada in 2012, and later became an entertainment reporter for City. Before that, he was a CFL player.

Producers say Top Chef Canada head judge Mark McEwan will join the judging panel, set to also include returning chefs Lynn Crawford, Massimo Capra, Michael Smith, Susur Lee and Roger Mooking.

Based on the U.S. series Chopped, the competition sees four chefs race against the clock to prepare dishes with surprise ingredients for a $10,000 prize.

Chopped Canada airs Saturdays on Food Network Canada.

Smith takes over from exiting host Dean McDermott, a tabloid magnet who made headlines for turmoil involving celebrity wife Tori Spelling. McDermott announced he was leaving the show earlier this year. THE CANADIAN PRESS

DEPRESSION

Impact of online bullying

About one in four children and adolescents on average report being the targets of cyberbullying, which is linked to a risk of depression among those victimized through email, texting or social media sites like Facebook, an international research review has found.

The analysis of 36 studies, conducted by researchers at the University of Alberta and the Ontario Centre for Excellence for Child and Adolescent Mental Health in Ottawa, was published Monday in JAMA Pediatrics.

"Within the depression category, there was a consistent association between exposure to cyberbullying and an increased likelihood of depression," said lead author Michele Hamm, a research associate at the Edmonton university.

The studies showed that females are more often the objects of cyberbullying than males and that relationship issues — between friends or in a dating situation — are often at the heart of the electronic attacks.

"We did pull out a few themes," said Hamm. "Girls tended to be bullied about their popularity and appearance, and boys tended to be bullied more with homophobic comments and (about) their physical abilities."

Effects of being bullied included becoming withdrawn, angry or embarrassed, she said.

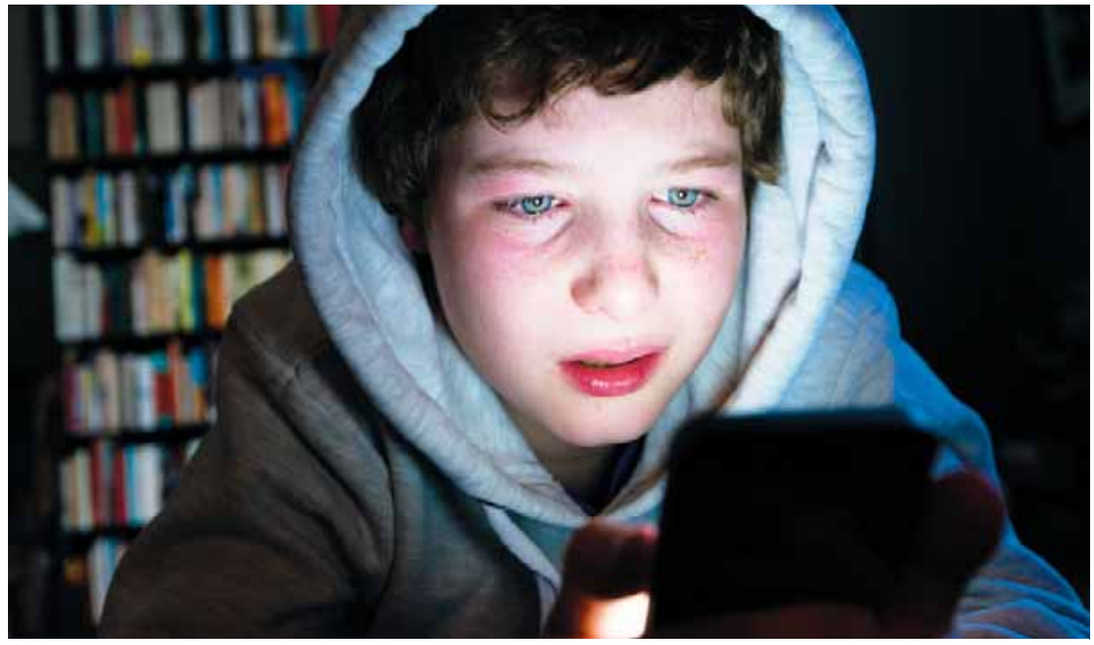
Bad cuts to fix bad behaviour

DISCIPLINE

Parents going viral with ugly hair cut videos shaming kids as punishment



Giving children bad haircuts, rather than taking away their gadgets, is growing among parents as a form of discipline. ISTOCK

Russell Fredrick's middle son was 12 when he wouldn't quit playing around in class and ignoring his homework, so the barber did what he does best. He picked up his clippers and cut off his fade.

But it wasn't just any cut. It was a complete shave intended as a form of discipline when other tactics like taking away gadgets failed to work.

"After I shaved him bald, I told him that if things continued I would get more creative with each cut," said Fredrick, co-owner of A-1 Kutz in Snellville, Ga. "But I never had to because he straightened up his act."

Fredrick and his son — one of three — are success stories in a social media trend: parents taking electric razors to the heads of their misbehaving tweens and teens to create ugly cuts as a form of punishment, then publicly posting the handiwork on YouTube, Facebook and elsewhere.

After Fredrick put a photo on Instagram of his son's shave late last year, parents began to approach him for embarrassing, old-man cuts dubbed Benjamin Button specials or the George Jefferson, named for their baldness up top and fringe left on the sides and around the base like the movie and TV characters they're named for.

He's done more than 20 since February, free of charge.

"Whenever people come in and ask for it we do it," said the 35-year-old Russell. "You've got to reach these kids before law enforcement has to do the punishing."

The spate of ugly-cut videos over the last six months or so has lit up debate over public shaming as discipline and fits into a broader trend of parents using social media video to humiliate their kids online, from yelling and screaming to smashing their computers or phones for infractions like bad grades or breaking curfew — to outright corporal punishment.

Clinical psychologist Claudia Shields of The Chicago School of Professional Psychology has helped parents find healthy ways of disciplining their children based on behavioural research. She's far from convinced that public shaming works.

"The most effective ways of changing behaviour, as surprising as it may seem, do not involve any form of punishment. I prefer discipline based on positive reinforcement. Many parents think that these are 'weaker' forms of punishment, but over and over, we find that this is more effective," she said.

Much has been made over the recent death of a teenage girl who killed herself in Tacoma, Wash., and a video shared online that shows her father scolding her after her hair was cut short. Police said, however, that the girl's death appears unrelated to the video and the father didn't share it on social media himself.

Fredrick is quick to point out that he gives away nice cuts as well to reward kids for excellent grades and to honour their birthdays.

And, the mother of his first Benjamin Button, named for the reverse-aging Brad Pitt character in The Curious Case of Benjamin Button, returned to let him know her son received an award at the end of school this year for best academic improvement.

"I try to talk to the kids a little first," he said. "They're usually pretty much embarrassed and feeling bad about what's going on. Nobody's come back a second time."

Helicopter dad in trouble once again

Hip-hop mogul on bail after alleged assault of UCLA coach

IN HOLLYWOOD

Ned Ehrbar

So Sean Combs is facing multiple felony assault charges — and, for some reason, a charge of "making terrorist threats" — and UCLA coaching staff member Sal Alosi nearly had his head bashed in with a kettlebell, but you know who you should really feel bad for in all of this? Combs' son, Justin Dior Combs.

First of all, his middle name is Dior. Thanks, Dad. And secondly, it's hilariously coming to light that Diddy is a "helicopter dad" when it comes to his son's football career, regularly attending practice, stalking the sidelines and butting in where his opinion is not necessarily needed or wanted. That's barely acceptable at pee-wee soccer games or high school athletics, but this is college football we're talking about. How embarrassing must it be for poor Justin Dior Combs?

Also, Diddy's helicopter parenting nonsense at practices sounds a lot like his producing work on his old hip-hop tracks, with him just interjecting a random "yeah" or "uh huh". Bad Boy for life, yo.

POSTED BAIL

The jail records show that Combs' bail was $160,000, but sheriff's officials reached by phone said he posted $50,000. The reason for the discrepancy wasn't clear. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Calvin proving he's the cat's meow

Today in superadorable news, Calvin Harris is reportedly cat-sitting for girlfriend Taylor Swift while she's out on the road on her world tour.

Not only that, but he's even posting cat videos of them on Instagram. This guy, am I right? I have a theory, though: Harris knows the risks in dating Swift, like how likely he is to be the subject of a song — or, who knows, an entire album — should things go bad. He's clearly going out of his way to counteract such a fate. And in the process, he's making life hell for every other boyfriend out there who will be compared to him. Thanks a lot, jerk.

Cruize Diesel loves highway

ROAD TESTED

MIKE GOETZ/FOR METRO

REVIEW

Chevrolet sedan boasts big range, fuel efficiency

Mike Goetz
Metro | Canada

The diesel-ization of passenger vehicles in North America is still a work in progress, unlike in Europe, where it's almost the default engine option.

But at least the latest diesel passenger car to enter the North American fray, the Chevrolet Cruize Diesel, is not from another German brand.

There is a lot of German content, however, in this compact American sedan. The turbocharged, direct-inject, 2.0-litre I4 diesel engine is built at Opel's plant in Kaiserslautern, Germany, which churns out more than 400,000 of them annually for various GM products, including the Opel Astra.

GM had to substantially modify the engine to meet this continent's diesel emission regulations and different diesel fuel formation. Those two differences are what generally keep European-market diesels from automatically landing on our shores.

But we're really glad Chevrolet made the effort. The Cruize Diesel is an intriguing little sedan. It won't have mass appeal, but to those so inclined, it should have huge appeal. Basically, if you drive a bunch, and mostly on the highway, you'll reap the benefits from this model's exemplary highway fuel efficiency, rated at 5.1 L/100 km, its big range between full-ups (more than 1,000 highway klicks), and its very comfy, and quiet highway manners.

Diesel efficiency shines less so in the city, and you'll be more aware of the diesel's nosier character, which rises up under acceleration. The Cruize Diesel also doesn't launch particularly well from a dead stop, feeling low on power.

Once the engine is spinning a bit, however, the power gets meaty, and when you get to highway speeds it very serene and relaxed.

The diesel Cruize only comes in one, well-equipped model, featuring leather seats, 17-inch aluminum wheels, and six-speed automatic transmission. Many fans of diesels are also predisposed to manual transmissions, to better eek out the diesel's inherent fuel-efficiency advantages. If you're in that camp, you'll have to stick with the VW Jetta TDI, which offers more trim-level variations, and continues to dominate the entry-level diesel market.

The VW Jetta TDI is also a bit more fun to drive, and has more rear seat space. Otherwise the Cruize Diesel distinguishes itself well, and feels very solid and well built.

Complexity underlies simplicity

DEGREES OF COMFORT

The making of seats that will warm you up and cool you down

• Most automakers only heat the two outside seats in vehicles with heated rear seats, because the middle seat is seldom used.

• Seat heaters have to be very durable, and the wires are made of special alloys that can flex and handle the occupant's weight.

• Ventilated seats blow air through perforations in the fabric, while cooled seats blow cold air-conditioned air.

DRIVING FORCE

A look inside temperature-controlled seats, wheels

Jil McIntosh
For Metro

You may not have much use for one right now, but when the weather gets colder, a heated seat can be a nice break from chilly weather. They're simple to use, but inside, they're actually quite complex.

"It is essentially a heating pad that we've designed to fit a seat," says Alison Rahm, chief engineer for the Chrysler 300, and Dodge Charger and Challenger. "But we have to modulate it, depending on ambient temperature and body heat. It's similar to a heating system in your home where you set the temperature, but the furnace doesn't run all the time."

Wired up

The flexible heating mats are pieces of fabric with wires inside.

"The pattern of the wires is dependent on the shape of the seat, the size, if it's the front or rear seat, the cushion or back, and the seat styling," Rahm says.

When electrical current is applied to the high-resistance alloy wires inside, they heat up. The mat is installed between the seat's foam and its upholstery fabric, and heats up the seat surface when the occupant turns on the switch.

If the seat heater has various settings, turning it up higher increases the amperage sent into the wires.

Each seat has a thermistor that measures the heat and sends the information back to a "comfort module," which regulates the amperage sent to the wires to make the seat hotter or cooler as needed.

Some vehicles also have heated steering wheels, which use wires wrapped around the wheel's inner frame.

The Chrysler 300 has a steering wheel that's a combination of wood and leather, and which presented additional issues.

"The wheel is moulded out of urethane, and a piece of real wood is cut and placed over that and fused around the wheel," Rahm says. "The trick is making sure that when you touch the wood or touch the leather, it feels exactly the same, but both of those (materials) transmit heat at a much different rate, so we separate the current."

Regulation

In the parts of the wheel that don't transmit heat as easily, the wires get hotter, so the wheel feels the same temperature all over. Like the seat heaters, the wheel is regulated with time and heat cycles as the ambient temperature changes. The heated wheel also automatically shuts off after an hour.

Seat and steering wheel heaters use a lot of electricity, but drivers tend to keep the cabin cooler when their hands and bodies are warm. For this reason, they're often found in electric vehicles, where it would take far more battery power to turn up the heater and warm the entire car.

Lighter Camaro, better performance

NEW CARS

Innovation on show in coupe

Shedding nearly 100 kilograms over the current model will give the 2016 Chevrolet Camaro coupe (right) better fuel economy with more nimble and responsive handling, the company says. The 2.0-litre four-cylinder turbocharged base engine combined with a smaller body and greater use of aluminum shows the 2016 Camaro "incorporates our most innovative engineering."

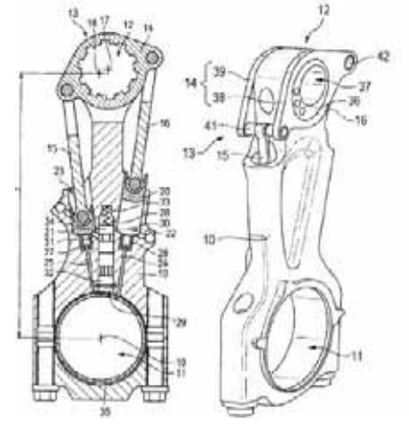
PRODUCTION

Porsche tackles turbo engine

Porsche is working on a viable variable-compression-ratio version of the turbocharged internal combustion gasoline engine, revealed in the form of a newly published patent (right). Able to alter its compression ratio from low to high depending on turbo boost, it has the potential to maximize fuel economy and efficiency while simultaneously improving outright performance.



FUEL

F-150 to offer cleaner burn

Automaker Ford will offer its 2016 F-150 full-size pickup truck with an available "gaseous fuel-prep package" that enables its 5.0-litre V8-powered models to run on cleaner-burning, lower-cost compressed natural gas (CNG) and propane. The CNG pickup will be able to tow the same amount as similarly sized gasoline engines, Ford said. Payload capacity is the same, as well, "minus the weight of the installed CNG or propane system." Comprised mainly of methane, compressed natural gas is stored and distributed in pressurized containers. CNG can reduce carbon-dioxide emissions by about 20 per cent when compared with the same vehicle operating on gasoline.

PRIUS PLUG-IN HYBRID

New model may be a year away

Production of the Toyota Prius Plug-in Hybrid (right) had been scheduled to end this month, but with no date set for the launch of the next-generation model of the car, it could be a year or more before a new one arrives. Nathan Kokes, a marketing representative for Toyota's advanced technology division, wrote on the official Prius chat forum that Toyota is "hard at work" developing the next-generation plug-in and that more information would be released closer to the car's launch date, which he did not reveal.

CHRYSLER

Seat system's future hinges on electrification

Chrysler wants to offer all-wheel-drive as an option for its next-generation Town & Country minivan, says Fiat Chrysler Automobiles CEO Sergio Marchionne. The company might opt for a compact all-electric system that would allow the Town & Country to maintain its Stow 'n' Go seating. Since folding the seats into the floor takes space, electric all-wheel-drive seems like a logical step, so buyers could have both Stow 'n' Go seating as well as all-wheel-drive.

Mazda CX-7: fun and sporty

USED VEHICLE

2007-2012 turbocharged models need more attention

The Mazda CX-7 crossover is now retired, though numerous 2007-2012 copies are available in the used marketplace, offering a sporty and sophisticated hauler that's big on fun-to-drive factor, all-season confidence, and a nice-looking cabin.

For turbocharged models, note that a turbocharger should last the life of the vehicle if the factory-prescribed oil-change schedule is adhered to. Be sure the seller of a used CX-7 with turbo power was fond of keeping up on oil changes.

Call the seller before you head over for a test-drive and ensure they don't start or drive the vehicle before you show up. You'll want to start the engine from dead cold, let it idle up to operating temperature for a few minutes, and then move to the tailpipes and have a look for thick white smoke which could indicate a problem with the turbocharger or the engine's internal ventilation system. In any case, the presence of smoke likely means you'll want to move to another unit.

After you've started the engine cold, pop the hood and head up front for a listen. Some owners have reported issues caused by a bad timing chain. The tell-tale sound is a diesel-like clattering that sounds like a fast-moving chain smacking around inside of a metal housing. As with any unusual sound on any used car you're considering, if you're not comfortable with a noise coming from under the hood, visit a mechanic and have him or her take a closer look, or move to another unit. JUSTIN PRITCHARD

Features

Look for high-end coveta-bles, including premium Bose audio, navigation, a sunroof, heated leather seats, automatic climate control and plenty more, depending on the model. Do you have things, people and pets? If so, they'll mostly fit into the CX-7, thanks to nearly 1,660 litres of cargo space and split-folding rear seats.

Engines

The CX-7's 2.5-litre four-cylinder engine generated 161 horsepower and used an electronically controlled five-speed automatic transmission. An award-winning 2.3-litre turbocharged four-cylinder DISI engine was available, as well, offering 244 horsepower backed by nearly 260 lb.-ft. of torque.

What owners like

Owners of the CX-7 typically rate fuel mileage on non-turbo units as being decent, and a nice blend of handling, sportiness, comfort and long-haul readiness is typically reported.

What owners dislike

Gripes typically centre around fuel consumption with the turbo engine, coupled with that engine's requirement to be fed premium-grade fuel, which is pricier.

The verdict

For maximum peace of mind, a non-turbo, front-drive Mazda CX-7 will be the best bet — not to mention less expensive to run, repair, and insure. A turbo model steps up the entertainment value, though shoppers are advised to make the checks mentioned in this article as a bare minimum, and visit a Mazda dealer for a pre-purchase inspection.

Germany stands out worldwide in car sharing

Car sharing, pioneered in Switzerland in the 1970s, is gaining popularity around the globe as people shy away from the cost of owning and maintaining an automobile.

And it's proving particularly successful in Germany, where young people in towns and cities don't necessarily want to have a car, said Stefan Bratzel, director of the Center for Automotive Management (CAM) in Bergisch-Gladbach, Germany.

Car sharing, which enables renting a car even for very short periods of time, at any hour of the day or night, appeals to such people.

The first car-sharing firm in Germany, Stattauto, was set up in Berlin in 1988, starting out with a single car.

By last year, there were as many as 140 operators in Europe's biggest economy, with 1.04 million registered users and a total combined pool of 15,400 cars at their disposal, according to figures compiled by the car-sharing industry federation BCS.

"That represents approximately half of the total offer in Europe," said Franck Leveque of consulting firm Frost & Sullivan.

Car sharing has been slower to catch on in other European countries. In Italy, there are around 250,000 customers, and in France and Britain around 200,000 each.

Further afield, there are about 700,000 users in Japan, which started car-sharing schemes in 2007, and 1.3 million in the U.S., according to recent data published by the University of California in Berkeley.

Gunnar Nehrke of BCS said Germany stands out because of the sheer size and extent of its network. "Here, car sharing is available in 490 towns and municipalities."

Leveque said another factor in the success of car sharing in Germany is the role of the automakers themselves: BMW has its own scheme, called DriveNow, and Daimler launched its Car2go in 2008. AFP

New York's Central Park to impose car ban

Cars will be banned from much of Central Park in New York by the end of the month, Mayor Bill de Blasio said recently, after complaints from residents and pedestrians. The measure goes into effect on June 29 and "will significantly reduce traffic in the park," de Blasio said, adding the space would become "safer and quieter and more enjoyable."

TripAdvisor awards Ducati Museum

The Ducati Museum in Bologna, Italy, has won the highest award from travel review Web site TripAdvisor for the fourth year in a row — its Certificate of Excellence. Located within the motorcycle company's production facility, the museum tracks the brand's history from its humble origins in 1926 to the present day. The venue may attract just 40,000 international visitors each year, but its permanent collection can now be toured virtually via Google Maps. AFP

Korean cars race ahead on quality

STUDY

Traditionally strong Japan takes back seat in rankings

The gap between Korean car brands and the rest of the U.S. car market has never been wider, the recently published J.D. Power 2015 US Quality Study suggests.

More startling is the fact that Japanese markets, once the global benchmark for automotive quality and reliability, have collectively fallen below the entire industry quality average for the first time in 29 years.

The study bases its scores on how many problems an owner experiences with a new car during the first 90 days and the number of problems per 100 vehicles — PP100. The lower the score, the higher the quality.

> "This is a clear shift in the quality landscape
> Renee Stephens, VP at J.D. Power

This year's industry average is 112 PP100, two points better than the average for Japanese brands (114 PP100), which are now on par with U.S. manufacturers.

But it is Korean brands, with an average of 90 PP100 that is remarkable, reflecting a considerable lead over the best of the rest of the industry.

"This is a clear shift in the quality landscape," said Renee Stephens, vice-president of U.S. automotive quality at J.D. Power. "For so long, Japanese brands have been viewed by many as the gold standard in vehicle quality." AFP

Backup Harris to open season as Argos' starter

CFL

Toronto have worthy stand-in for injured star QB Ricky Ray

It was during the 2013 season, when Ricky Ray missed extended time with knee and shoulder injuries, that an unheralded Zach Collaros stepped up for the Toronto Argonauts.

Collaros, a sophomore from Cincinnati, won five of the seven starts he made in Ray's absence that year, helping the defending Grey Cup champions finish atop the East Division standings with an 11-7 record. Following the '13 season, Collaros signed as a free agent with the Hamilton Tiger-Cats to be their starter.

Fast-forward two seasons later, and Ray is starting the 2015 campaign on the six-game injured list following off-season shoulder surgery. So fourth-year veteran Trevor Harris steps in as Toronto's starter heading into the club's home opener Saturday in Fort McMurray, Alta., against the Edmonton Eskimos.

> It's just about being more prepared every day and being ready to do the reps physically as opposed to just mentally.
> Argos' Trevor Harris

Fortunately for Toronto, the six-foot-three, 235-pound Harris appeared in five games last season and started the club's regular-season finale against Ottawa. The Argos won 23-5 as Harris finished 26-of-36 passing for 281 yards with two TDs and an interception while rushing for 14 yards on three carries.

Harris completed 42-of-60 passes for 449 yards with two touchdowns and one interception in 2014. The 29-year-old native of Waldo, Ohio, says being the starter won't change how he prepares for games.

"It's a little bit different knowing that you're going to play but it's just a different feeling," Harris said. "It's not any different in preparation or the way I study my gameplan, watch film or anything of that nature.

"It's just about being more prepared every day and being ready to do the reps physically as opposed to just mentally."

The Argos open the season away from Rogers Centre for its first six games because of the Pan Am Games going on in the city for the entire month of July as well as scheduling conflicts at their usual home.

But this will be the Argos' final campaign at the domed facility; the franchise was sold last month to the Kilmer Group of Larry Tanenbaum — the chairman of Maple Leafs Sports and Entertainment — and Bell.

The Argos are scheduled to move into a refurbished BMO Field in 2016, a year before their lease at Rogers Centre was scheduled to expire.

Incident has TFC fired up ahead of Montreal clash

Greg Vanney said it is 'baffling' why the MLS has chose not discipline Andrew Jacobson VAUGHN RIDLEY/GETTY IMAGES

Toronto FC doesn't need a rivalry to get them riled up for Wednesday's game against Montreal Impact.

Toronto will be fuelled by leftover feelings from last weekend's nasty loss to New York City FC that had Reds coach Greg Vanney seeing red on Tuesday.

Vanney was angry that Major League Soccer decided not to discipline New York's Andrew Jacobson, who hit an unsuspecting Damien Perquis hard in the back of the neck, dropping the TFC defender to the turf. When the final whistle blew on Toronto's 2-0 loss Saturday, an irate Perquis made a beeline to Jacobson, and a shoving match ensued.

"My understanding is there isn't anything that's going to be done about it," Vanney told reporters after Tuesday's practice. "It's beyond baffling to me. To me it's a vicious an attack on a player who was defenceless."

Soon after the game, video of the incident, which happened on a corner kick, surfaced on social media. Toronto FC had reached out to the league to review what happened. "I don't know how with video evidence and looking back at something you can't say that that was some form of an egregious act on a player, towards his head," Vanney said.

"But clearly with the disciplinary committee, they found that OK, and I find that disgusting."

TFC's game against Montreal is part of Rivalry Week in MLS and kicks off Wednesday 8p.m. at the BMO.

IN BRIEF

Tom Brady's appeal in deflategate saga begins

Tom Brady and representatives from the players' union have been meeting with Commissioner Roger Goodell at NFL headquarters for much of Tuesday as the New England quarterback appeals his four-game suspension.

Brady was suspended by the league for his role in the use of deflated footballs in the AFC championship game win over Indianapolis. He arrived at the NFL's Park Avenue offices Tuesday morning, as did attorney Jeffrey Kessler, who is leading Brady's defence. The hearing was expected to adjourn in late afternoon. Stanton overtakes Aoki in NL All-Star voting

Major league home run leader Giancarlo Stanton has moved back into position to start in next month's All-Star game.

The Miami slugger rose from fourth to second among NL outfielders in totals announced Tuesday, with San Francisco's Nori Aoki dropping out of the top three. Washington's Bryce Harper leads NL outfielders with 9.2 million votes, followed by Stanton at 4.8 million, injured St. Louis star Matt Holliday at 4.7 million and Aoki at 4.3 million.

Cavaliers acquire centre Mozgov's option for 2016

The Cavaliers made their first move of the summer, the easiest one.

As expected, the team picked up the $5 million option on centre Timofey Mozgov's contract for next season on Tuesday.

There was never a doubt the Cavs would bring back the 7-foot-1 centre, acquired in a January trade from Denver in exchange for two first-round draft picks. Mozgov transformed the Cavs on defence after Anderson Varejao was lost for the season with injury.

Mozgov, 28, averaged a career-high 10.6 points and 6.9 rebounds in 45 regular-season starts.

This salad is perfect in a baked tortilla shell. Serves eight.

Ready in
Prep time: 15 minutes
Cook time: 8 minutes

Ingredients
- 8 oz whole wheat elbow macaroni
- 1 cup canned corn kernels, drained
- 1 1/2 cups chopped seeded plum tomatoes
- 1 cup canned black beans, rinsed and drained
- 1/2 cup chopped green onion
- 1/3 cup chopped fresh cilantro or parsley
- 1/3 cup barbecue sauce
- 2 Tbsp cider vinegar
- 1 Tbsp molasses
- 1 tsp minced, seeded jalapeño pepper or hot chili sauce to taste

Directions

1. Bring a saucepan of water to a boil and cook the macaroni for eight to 10 minutes, or until tender but firm. Drain, rinse and drain again. Place in a large serving bowl.

2. Spray a non-stick skillet with cooking oil and set over high heat. Cook the corn, stirring often, until slightly charred, about eight minutes. Add to the macaroni, along with the tomatoes, beans, onion and cilantro. Toss to combine.

3. To make the dressing, whisk the barbecue sauce, cider vinegar, molasses and jalapeño together in a small bowl. Pour the dressing over the macaroni mixture and toss to coat. Serve immediately or chill.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
If some minor thing goes wrong today don't get angry and make a big deal of it. Some issues are worth getting worked up about and some aren't. If you still don't know the difference it's time to learn.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
Something fortunate will happen today but you may not realize how fantastic it is for a while. If someone you meet while on your travels gives you advice you should take it — they know what they are talking about.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Others may say you are aiming too high but the planets indicate that if you move confidently in the direction of your dreams they will come true — and maybe quicker than you imagined.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
You won't be content to sit back and watch other people snatch the glory today — you want it all for yourself. With Mars moving into your birth sign you intend to be Number One and your self-belief will make it happen.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Don't be too eager to apologize if you annoy someone today — most likely they deserved to be put in their place. If you make it clear you won't be intimidated it will save you a lot of trouble later on.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You will have to deal with someone today who, to put it nicely, isn't on the same intelligence level as you. It may be a pain having to explain everything in words of three syllables or less but it's the only way they'll get it.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Do not allow anyone to deflect you from the path you have chosen. If you let others sow seeds of doubt in your mind your chances of success will diminish. Ignore the critics.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You are not usually the type to draw attention to yourself but with Mars moving into one of the more positive areas of your chart today you will find it hard to keep a low profile. Shout about your achievements — they are worth knowing about.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You need to join forces with like-minded people or you could miss out on a really big prize. You may think you know more than most, and maybe you do, but that does not mean you can do it all on your own.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Something out of the ordinary will happen today or tomorrow and to say you will be surprised is a massive understatement. Whatever it is and be it "good" or "bad," keep your cool and find ways to make it work for you.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
If you make major changes now you may want to change back again in a few days or a few weeks and that won't be easy. Before you do anything silly ask yourself: are things really as bad as they seem? Probably not.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
Life is not a zero sum game and other people don't have to lose just so you can win. Keep that in mind today and strive to find ways to profit that will benefit others as well. Be ambitious but be creative too.
